The Great War, or First World War (1914-18), was a cataclysmic event so shocking that we are still living with its effects. The war was still contested. But the impact went beyond geopolitics. Theories of the mind were recast, as the first diagnosis of post-traumatic stress disorder challenged prevailing notions of the psyche. Especially in Britain, women replaced men on the factory line, disrupting traditional norms of gender and domestic space. And the young men and women who came of age during the war, those whom Gertrude Stein called "the lost generation," would have a profound impact on American literature. In short, the Great War

Focusing on twentieth and twenty-first century shapings of the meanings of the Shoah through specific disciplines, discourses, institutions and media, the course will consider examples of fiction, poetry, memoir, Night, Life with a Coward, The Last of the Just, Death Fugue, Denial and The Book of David. We will also discuss the work of Charlotte Delbo and Jorge Semprun, and look at the story Denial, which considers the enduring problem of telling and retelling the history of the Shoah.

The course will involve writing two essays, one a short critical analysis essay, and the other a longer research paper, embedding secondary sources. There will also be weekly assigned readings and periodic reading journal due.
